Help others overcome personal obstacles

Help clients overcome problems within their families and relationships, as well as mental and emotional disorders with ACU's online Master of Marriage and Family Therapy.

The need for professionals who can help couples and families work through and cope with difficult issues is on the rise. The Department of Labor reports that this career field will grow faster than the average occupation through 2024. This two-year, 60-hour graduate program will prepare you for Christian service and leadership in a variety of secular and faith-based clinical, medical or counseling settings.

You will receive practical training in couple, family and child therapy; mental illness; substance abuse and addiction; and assessment and diagnosis. You will gain real-world experience through a 500-hour internship.

You may also elect to pursue a specialization in Medical Family Therapy, a growing area of interest in the mental health profession, through a 15-credit, 11-month certificate program.
